

A fragmented industry is an industry with a large number of small or medium size firms where no firm has a significant market share or strong influence on the industry. Examples include industries related to services, retailing, distribution, wood and metal fabrication, agricultural products, and creative businesses.